Redefining Beauty

Implant Exchange

Why and When you should you Exchange your Implants.

The decision to change your implants can include a myriad of factors. Aging, pregnancy, and weight fluctuations that occur after the first breast augmentation procedure may affect the skin and deeper tissues of the breasts. These changes can make the skin thinner and the deeper tissues weaker. This may result in smaller breasts with increased visibility of implant ripples due to the loss of breast tissue volume and implant migration. In addition, excess skin may also develop. Increasing the implant volume, upgrading from saline to silicone to reduce ripples, and gaining a more natural, tear-drop shape can help alleviate these issues. Implants can also migrate in the pocket due to wear and tear over time, necessitating internal pocket suturing modifications. Finally, a donut or full breast lift may be required to address the increased laxity of the breast skin envelope.

Implants do not last forever. When a saline implant ruptures, the water gets absorbed into the surrounding tissues and is noticed immediately. For patients who are not experiencing issues with their saline implants, Dr. Lille advises that an implant exchange is not necessary. However, Dr. Lille recommends changing silicone implants every 10-14 years. The rupture rate increases yearly and cannot be detected in silicone implants. The exchange for a non-ruptured silicone implant is much less complicated with fewer costs compared to ruptured silicone implants. If you are experiencing some or any of these findings, please contact our office for a personal consult with Dr. Lille
